Taft decided to call the extra session he became thoroughly satisfied that should he decide upon that course he might be expected to have Congress on his hands for practically all the summer, and, in fact, until well along into the early fall. He knew he would be able to spend but little of the comcapital, but there will be breathing spells in between the time when the session begins next month and its final adjournment, when the President will be able to run over to Beverly for a day's junket. Beyond this, however, he will get little vacation this summer; in fact, he expects none, and is ready to stay in Washington about as long

Not Disagrecable.

Summer in the White House, however, will probably be anything but disagreeable to the members of the President's household from a climatic standpoint. The big white mansion that adorns Pennsylvania Avenue, is especially well adapted for summer habitation. Of liberal dimensions, with high ceilings and massive windows, the present Executive Mansion is an ideal place to spend the warm days if one is forced to remain in Washington, when others go to mountain and seashore. Provided with plenty of room, a first-class cook to give attention to his gastronomic needs, magnificent oaks to provide protection from the sun's rays, and, above all, the appearance of the Marine Band on the lawn each Saturday afternoon, there is

Notre Dame, Ind., March 26.—The Lactare medal, annually awarded by the University of Notre Dame to a lay member of the Catholic Church in the United States who has performed conspicuous work in literature, art, science or phllanthropy, is awarded this year to Miss Agnes Repplier, the essayist, of Philadelphia. She was chosen by the board of trustees for the highest honor the university confers for her fine service in American literature, extending over a quarter of a century. In 1903 the University of Pennsylvania conferred on her the degree of doctor of letters.

The medal is a large disk of pure gold, highly enameled. On the obverse side is a design embiematic of the special field in which the person who is honored has worked.

The medal takes its name from the fourth Sunday in Lent, which is called Lactare Sunday. The award is made on that day. The occasion of presentation always draws together a large number of the hierarchy of the Catholic Church.
